I am getting requests for this poem. I sent it out once before..but here it is again. Not sure how to add it to the Files..I can upload it to someone who knows how to do it. I'd send it to Bill..but I know he's very busy getting ready to head out tomorrow.

BTW>>we are initiating a new candidate at our April 5th meeting and our Grand Conductress from PA (Beverly Small) is doing the initatory work. If you live close and are planning at attend, please let me know. Thanks!

Who wears the blue above her heart
 Would well fulfill a daughter's part;
 And win a Father's love.
 For in it she can plainly see
 An emblem of fidelity
 To home and God above.
 And she shall gain eternal bliss on this design
 And this and this.

Who wears the yellow on her breast
 Would well her constancy attest;
 No matter what befell.
 And though she fills a widow's part
 She'd still be guided by the heart
 And do her duty well.
 And she shall gain eternal bliss on this design
 And this and this.

Who wears the white, the spotless white
 Though crown and scepter be in sight;
 Would answer duty's call.
 For in it as a wife she'd see;
 An emblem of that purity
 That God demands of all.
 And she shall gain eternal bliss on this design
 And this and this.

Who wears the green can in it see
 A pledge of immortality
 A Hope that never dies.
 And she shall feel a sister's love;
 For many who have gone above,
 To homes beyond the skies.
 And she shall gain eternal bliss on this design
 And this and this.

Who wears the red can feel the fire,
 That makes a mother's love inspire;
 Her heart to noble deeds.
 Her children playing at her knee
 Will well attest her fervency
 With which she stays their needs.
 And she shall gain eternal bliss on this design
 And this and this.

Who wears the star-the Eastern Star
 That wise men followed from afar;
 Shown by their Godly deeds
 They saw its light.
 And still they keep it in their sight,
 And follow where it leads;
 And they shall make their lives to shine
 Over all the earth on this design.

A smile is a light in the window of the soul indicating that the heart is at home.
